

Heya collaborative

In Japanese, Heya means “small room.” Designer Roger Webb created Heya to form smaller spaces within an environment. We sought to foster smaller rooms within a space where individuals and groups alike can find an escape from the larger office to accomplish what they need most. This meant creating all the pieces that support the needs of the individuals within. From large worktables, privacy screens, pull-up tables, to mobile hideaways, the Heya line was created to blend seamlessly into the office while providing the privacy that people truly need to focus.
